“All Together Now” brings together seven artists from across Maryland working in various 2-D media. Each artist contributes their unique perspective on the relationship between the individual and society. During the past year, with the advent of a global pandemic, the interconnectedness of humanity and the individual’s role has been brought into sharp focus.

“These unexpected and unique circumstances have forced society to consider and grapple with several issues, including isolation, the individual’s responsibility and its impact on the whole of society, and vice versa, and the importance and the critical role of community.” says exhibition curator, Rula Jones.
